What is Fetch.ai?

Fetch.ai is a blockchain-based artificial intelligence (AI) and machine learning (ML) platform. Fetch.ai aims to offer platforms and services for artificial intelligence (AI) that will enable anyone to create and use AI at any scale, at any time, and from any location.

The platform's goal is to serve as a decentralized digital representation of the real world where autonomous software agents carry out profitable economic activities. This suggests that users can use the Fetch.ai platform to carry out tasks like providing services or distributing data while being paid with digital currency in the form of Fetch tokens (FET) for their efforts.

Fetch.ai is, to put it simply, a platform that aims to connect devices and make it possible for markets to be created in order to increase the value of the data.

Fetch blockchain is built on the Cosmos-SDK network, which allows for multichain interoperability through the inter-blockchain communication (IBC) protocol. This means that agent-based services can be introduced on other networks like Cosmos (ATOM), Ethereum (ETH), and Binance Smart Chain. It is well known that the Fetch.ai protocol supports a number of functions, including an identity that enables agent deployment, staking, and token administration.

They're creating a hub for multi-agent systems, blockchain technology, and artificial intelligence. A distributed ledger and a decentralized Random Beacon protocol are also used by the system. It blends machine learning with the benefits of slot Proof-of-Stake (sPoS), which reduces storage needs, and multi-sig, which reduces computing costs. By connecting companies with the blockchain and getting rid of middlemen, Fetch is aiming to solve the issue of automation.
