The tap-to-earn game and Telegram bot Hamster Kombat became viral (or at least made waves in the cryptocurrency market) just three months after its release. The proliferation of the cryptocurrency market means that games like this are nothing new. They have been around for quite some time, providing incentives for people to play games or complete easy activities. Similarly, in Hamster Kombat, players are encouraged to tap the screen as frequently as they can in order to accumulate HMSTR tokens, which can be converted into fiat currency in the future. You can obtain similar incentives in a few more ways, such as via mining, referring friends, or accomplishing chores.

It is currently not possible to withdraw HMSTR tokens from the site, but users can store them in the TONNE wallet until the token is available on exchanges.

Hamster Komabt Is Following Notcoin's Successes

Notcoin (NOT) is well-known for being both a cryptocurrency and a popular tap-to-earn game, where users can win rewards just by pressing on the screen. As the Notcoin game gained popularity among crypto aficionados, the rumour spread that it was based on the cryptocurrency, and now Hamster Kombat is doing the same. As a result of its rapid growth, Hamster Kombat now boasts 200 million active players, 10 million on its X platform, and countless more across various social networking sites.

Hamster Kombat Token: When Is It Going to Be Launched?

Token generation event (TGE) launch and airdrop to reward early backers were announced on the Hamster Kombat website in July 2024. Launching on the TONNE Network, Hamster Kombat will follow in Notcoin's footsteps. The HMSTR coins are worthless for now, however that will all change after the token launch.

Since the whitepaper is still being worked on, its entire supply has not been confirmed yet. On the other hand, 10 billion HMSTR tokens are expected to be set aside for specific marketing initiatives. The precise distribution of these tokens cannot be determined at this time since the whitepaper has not been released.

Airdrops are expected to receive approximately 1% of tokens, community incentives will receive roughly 1%, partnerships will receive 76%, the token utility will receive 7.75%, and developers will receive 5.75%. The remaining 0.25 percent could go towards listing on decentralised exchanges and the IDO.

Is Hamster Kombat Supported by Binance?

There is a lot of demand for Hamster Komabat because it has quickly become popular among a large audience. Kucoin, Gate.io, and Bitget are just a few of the cryptocurrency exchanges that have announced their intention to offer the HMSTR token.

While Binance has been mum on the listing, they have covered several stories and trends related to it. Their interest in using cryptocurrency for gaming is hinted at by this. Experts predict that Binance will list HMSTR after the TGE, at the end of July.

Many Nations Express Concerns About Regulations

Russia, Ukraine, and Uzbekistan are reportedly among the most avid fans of Hamster Kombat. In addition to the nations where Telegram is quite popular, it also has a large user base there. But their government isn't pleased about it since they see it as gambling, harmful to youngsters, and a financial risk. Russia is home to Hamster Kombat, yet some nations are worried about the security and privacy of their citizens because of it. Of them, some nations, like Uzbekistan, have imposed a 15-day hold on token withdrawals.
