What is RWA Tokenization?

Before we learn Rexas Finance (RXS) project, it is necessary for us to know what Real World Asset (RWA) tokenization. As blockchain technology continues to revolutionize industries across the globe, one area witnessing a significant transformation is Real World Asset (RWA) tokenization. Real World Asset tokenization usually refers to the process of converting ownership rights in physical assets—such as property, art, precious metals, or commodities—into digital tokens on a blockchain. This innovation enables individuals to trade fractionalized portions of assets, similar to how shares of a publicly traded company work.

RWA tokenization brings several advantages, revolutionizing the landscape of asset trading. At first, it eradicates the need for intermediaries like brokers, banks, and legal consultants, thereby significantly reducing transaction costs.

Another major benefit is the ability of round-the-clock trading. In contrast to traditional markets' restricted operational hours, blockchain-based assets can be bought or sold at any time, granting traders and investors unparalleled flexibility. This feature also bolsters liquidity, permitting fractional ownership of high-priced assets and broadening the pool of potential buyers.

Moreover, blockchain technology guarantees transparency by permanently logging each transaction on an immutable ledger, fostering trust and accountability in an industry that often suffers from opacity. These compelling advantages are driving the growing interest of financial institutions and traditional investors in the RWA tokenization model.
