Binance Requests Project Applications to Expand Market

Binance said on Monday that it is accepting project proposals to increase the number of tokens it offers. The goal of this change is to encourage a more varied ecosystem in the market. Binance highlighted its dedication to sustaining medium-to small-sized enterprises that have solid foundations and organic community bases. To alleviate worries about tokens being launched at inflated valuations, Binance is working to create a healthy market environment. “We are dedicated to changing this trend and creating a more inclusive market for our users,” the exchange declared.

Projects with reasonable valuations in comparison to competitors are the focus of Binance’s endeavor. To better suit the needs of both retail investors and the communities affected by the projects, it places an emphasis on community engagement. Launches of significant value are intended to be protected by this method.

The Shiba Inu community, also referred to as the Shib Army, has been pushing for Binance to include BONE ShibaSwap for quite some time. Their cries have been ignored for a long time, but the latest news has sparked renewed excitement.

Binance has made it clear that it will only back initiatives that have solid foundations, genuine community bases, long-term commercial plans, and committed teams. Projects from all industries are encouraged to apply, according to the notice. With a tokenomics structure that puts community members first, Binance focuses on projects with moderate valuations.
